1) Read the following passage and answer the questions given below. (10 marks)

We first noticed that something unusual was happening when one of the ship's officers came up to the chief engineer, who sat at our table, and spoke to him in a low voice. The chief engineer at once stood up and with a brief excuse, left the dinning-room. At first we thought that there had been a fire on board the ship, but soon we heard that a man had been seen floating in the sea. Then we noticed that the ship had slowed down and was beginning to turn round with rather a violent motion. Some passengers did not wait to finish their meal but rushed up on deck. Others crowded round the port holes making it impossible for us to eat in comfort. There was such confusion in the dinning-room that we decided to join those who had gone up on deck.

1. Where was the writer when something unusual was happening?

2. Who spoke to the ship's officer?

3. What did people think was happening at first?

Question 01

(20 marks)

Read the passage and answer the questions in complete sentences.

The sun is the star at the center of the solar system. It is nearly perfect sphere of hot plasma with internal convective motion that generates a magnetic field, via dynamic process. Its gravity holds solar system together keeping the smallest particles of debris in orbit. It is by far the most important source of energy. It is 4603 billion years old or approximately halfway through its life cycle. The temperature at the surface of the sun is about 5600 Celsius.

Life on earth is-impossible without the sun! Day after day we experience heat and light, but we seldom consider the origin of these wonders. The sun has many wonders. There is, for example, its great distance from the earth. The distance of the sun from the earth is about ninety-three million miles. A journey from the earth to the sun, even in a fast rocket, means travel for several hundred years.

The sun is a very large star. The planet earth is small in comparison. One hundred and nine globes the size of the earth can stretch from one side of the sun to the other. The sun makes us feel hot, even at a distance of ninety-three million miles. This is not surprising. The temperature on the surface of the sun is about ten thousand degree Fahrenheit. But we receive only a very small part of this heat. The total heat of the sun can melt a column of ice two and a quarter mile thick and ninety-three million miles high in one second.

The brightness of the sun is equally astonishing. The sun's total light is equal to 1.575,000,000,000,000,000 wax candles! This very long row of figures gives us some idea of the brilliance of the sun. as we said earlier, we receive only a very small part of the sun's heat. We also receive only a very small part of its light. This is sufficient for the growth of trees and plants, and for the existence of animals on earth. Too much heat and light destroy the balance of life. The heat and light from the sun come in just the right quantities for life on earth.

Question 01

Read the following passage and answer the questions given below. (10 marks)

Christopher Columbus was born in Genoa, Italy in 1451. While spending most of his early years at sea, Columbus began to believe that he could find a shortcut to the Indies by sailing west across the Atlantic Ocean. Unfortunately, the King of Portugal refused to finance such a trip, and Columbus was forced to present his idea to the King and Queen of Spain. In 1492, King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella agreed to pay for his trip. They gave him a crew and three ships, the Nina, Pinta and Santa Maria. Columbus sailed aboard the Santa Maria.

The trip was long and hard. Many sailors grew restless and wanted to turn around. After two months at sea, land was finally sighted. The ships docked on the island of Hispaniola. Columbus named the native people he saw "Indians", because he believed he had found the shortcut he was looking for. In actuality, Columbus found North America, a brand new continent at that time. Columbus, however, couldn't be convinced.

1. Read the following passage and answer the questions given below. (10 marks)

We first noticed that something unusual was happening when one of the ship's officers came up to the chief engineer, who sat at our table, and spoke to him in a low voice. The chief engineer at once stood up and with a brief excuse, left the dining-room. At first we thought that there had been a fire on board the ship, but soon we heard that a man had been seen floating in the sea. Then we noticed that the ship had slowed down and was beginning to turn round with rather a violent motion. Some passengers did not wait to finish their meal but rushed up on deck. Others crowded round the portholes making it impossible for us to eat in comfort. There was such confusion in the dining room that we decided to join those who had gone up on deck.

Question 01

(10 marks)

Read the following passage and answer the questions given below

A ship is a large vessel that floats on water; ships are generally distinguished from boats based on size. Ships may be found on lakes, seas, and rivers and they allow for a variety of activities, such as the transport of persons or goods, fishing, entertainment, public safety, and warfare. Ships and boats have developed alongside mankind. In major wars, and in day-to-day life, they have become an integral part of modern commercial and military systems. Fishing boats are used by millions of fishermen throughout the world. Military forces operate highly sophisticated vessels to transport and support forces ashore. Commercial vessels, nearly 35,000 in number, carried 7.4 billion tons of cargo in 2007.

1. Read the following passage and answer the questions given below. (10 marks)

We first noticed that something unusual was happening when one of the ship's officers came up to the chief engineer, who sat at our table, and spoke to him in a low voice. The chief engineer at once stood up and with a brief excuse, left the dining-room. At first we thought that there had been a fire on board the ship, but soon we heard that a man had been seen floating in the sea. Then we noticed that the ship had slowed down and was beginning to turn round with rather a violent motion. Some passengers did not wait to finish their meal but rushed up on deck. Others crowded round the portholes making it impossible for us to eat in comfort. There was such confusion in the dining room that we decided to join those who had gone up on deck.

1. Where was the writer when something unusual was happening?

1) Read the following passage and answer the questions below (10 marks)

Christopher Columbus was born in Genoa, Italy in 1451. While spending most of his early years at sea, Columbus began to believe that he could find a shortcut to the Indies by sailing west across the Atlantic Ocean. Unfortunately, the King of Portugal refused to finance such a trip, and Columbus was forced to present his idea to the King and Queen of Spain. In 1492, King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella agreed to pay for his trip. They gave him a crew and three ships, the Nina, Pinta and Santa Maria. Columbus sailed aboard the Santa Maria.

The trip was long and hard. Many sailors grew restless and wanted to turn around. After two months at sea, land was finally sighted. The ships docked on the island of Hispaniola. Columbus named the native people he saw "Indians", because he believed he had found the shortcut he was looking for. In actuality, Columbus found North America, a brand new continent at that time. Columbus, however, couldn't be convinced.

1. Read the following passage and answer the questions given below (10 marks)

Christopher Columbus was born in Genoa, Italy in 1451. While spending most of his early years at sea, Columbus began to believe that he could find a shortcut to the Indies by sailing west across the Atlantic Ocean. Unfortunately, the King of Portugal refused to finance such a trip, and Columbus was forced to present his idea to the King and Queen of Spain. In 1492, King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella agreed to pay for his trip. They gave him a crew and three ships, the Nina, Pinta and Santa Maria. Columbus sailed aboard the Santa Maria.

The trip was long and hard. Many sailors grew restless and wanted to turn around. After two months at sea, land was finally sighted. The ships docked on the island of Hispaniola. Columbus named the native people he saw "Indians", because he believed he had found the shortcut he was looking for. In actuality, Columbus found North America, a brand new continent at that time. Columbus, however, couldn't be convinced.

1. Read the following passage and answer the questions given below. (10 marks)

We first noticed that something unusual was happening when one of the ship's officers came up to the chief engineer, who sat at our table, and spoke to him in a low voice. The chief engineer at once stood up and with a brief excuse, left the dining-room. At first we thought that there had been a fire on board the ship, but soon we heard that a man had been seen floating in the sea. Then we noticed that the ship had slowed down and was beginning to turn round with rather a violent motion. Some passengers did not wait to finish their meal but rushed up on deck. Others crowded round the portholes making it impossible for us to eat in comfort. There was such confusion in the dining room that we decided to join those who had gone up on deck.

1. What was the writer doing when something unusual was happening?

2. Who spoke to the chief engineer?

3. What did people think was happening at first?

Question 1

Read this passage and answer the questions below in complete sentences. (15 marks)

The Caspian Sea

The Caspian Sea, situated between Europe and Asia, is the largest inland body of water in the world. It is about 1210 km (750 mi) in length and ranges between 210 and 436 km (130 - 271 mi) in width. The area of the Caspian Sea is 371,000 sq. km (143,000 sq. mi). In comparison, Lake Superior, the largest of the North American Great Lakes, is only 82,000 sq. km (31,000 sq. mi). The Caspian Sea is about 4½ times bigger than Lake Superior! However, unlike Lake Superior, the Caspian Sea is slightly saline. Saline means that there is salt in the water. The Caspian Sea has only about a third of the salt that the oceans' waters contain. About 55 million years ago, the Caspian Sea was part of a larger ocean called the Tethys Ocean. This ocean connected the Atlantic and Pacific oceans across what is now Asia. Continental shifts and change in the water level caused the Tethys Ocean to lose the connection with the other two oceans, and to begin to disappear. Now its source of water is from freshwater rivers, not other oceans, and over time the saltwater has gotten diluted; this is why the Caspian Sea is only slightly saline.

The Caspian Sea is divided into three parts roughly based on depth. When the three parts are looked at with respect to the percentage of the total area they occupy, they are all almost equal. The northern part of the Sea is 25% of the total area, while both the middle and southern parts take up about 37% each. However, when the three parts are looked at with respect to the percentage of the total volume of the sea, they are very different. The northern part of the sea might take up 25% of the area, but it is only 0.5% of the total volume! The middle part of the sea accounts for 33.9% of the total volume, and the southern part of the sea has 65.6% of the total volume. The northern part is very shallow throughout, with an average depth of 5 m. The middle part of the Caspian Sea contains the Derbent Depression, with a maximum depth of 500 m and the southern part contains the South Caspian Depression, with a maximum depth of 1025 m.

The Caspian Sea is surrounded by Azerbaijan, Russia, Kazakhstan, Turkmenistan, and Iran. To the south and southwest, it is bordered by the Elburz and Caucasus Mountains, and at the northern end of the sea is the massive Volga River delta. The Caspian Sea has about 130 big and small tributary rivers. Tributary means that the stream or river flows into a larger stream, river or sea. The largest of these rivers is the Volga River flowing in from the north. The Volga River delta is 500 m in width.

The different types of animals and plants living in and around the Caspian Sea are very interesting. The Caspian Sea, like Australia and the Galapagos Islands, has been isolated for so long that there are some species of animals that live only in the Caspian Sea. These animals are endemic to the Caspian Sea. Among these animals are many species of sturgeon: giant, ancient fish (below). Sturgeons are the fish that make caviar. Sturgeons have been around for millions of years--so long that they can be called "living fossils". At one time, sturgeons lived in many of the ancient seas, but over time they began to die out. The Caspian Sea was one of the few places where sturgeons remained. Another interesting animal found in the Caspian Sea is the Caspian seal, Latin name Phoca caspica. The Caspian seal is the only mammal living in the Caspian Sea and is the only place that this seal calls home.

(10 marks)

Fill in the blanks with the correct form of the verb given within brackets.

Planet Ocean

In the late 1960s, the Apollo Mission captured images of Earth from space for the very first time. These iconic photos (1) (give) people around the world a fresh perspective on our home planet – more specifically, its vast and dazzling expanses of blue. It is perhaps unsurprising that science (2) (have) subsequently established the key roles that the ocean and its marine organisms (3) (play) in maintaining a planetary environment suitable for life.

While the Apollo astronauts were sending back pictures of our blue planet, a scientist at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in California (4) (search) for ways to detect life on other planets such as Mars. James Lovelock's investigations led him to conclude that the only way to explain the atmospheric composition of Earth (5) (be) that life was manipulating it daily. In various publications, including his seminal 1979 book Gaia: A New Look at Life on Earth, Lovelock launched the Gaia hypothesis, which describes how the physical and living components of the natural environment, including humankind, (6) (interact) to maintain conditions on Earth. During the same period, marine scientists including Lawrence Pomeroy, Farooq Azam and Hugh Ducklow were establishing a firm link between the major biogeochemical cycles in the oceans and marine food webs, particularly their microbial components. In the late 1980s and 1990s, large-scale research programs like the Joint Global Ocean Flux Study (JGOFS) (7) (explore) ocean biogeochemistry and (8) (establish) the oceans' pivotal role in the Earth's carbon cycle.

Research efforts like these underscored the oceans' critical importance in regulating all the major nutrient cycles on Earth. It (9) (be) now widely recognized that the ocean (10) (regulate) the temperature of Earth, controls its weather, provides us with oxygen, food and building materials, and even recycles our waste.

Question 1

Read the following passage and answer the questions in complete sentences. (15 marks)

Having gotten permission and funds from Ferdinand and Isabella, Columbus set about outfitting a little fleet for a trip across the "Ocean Sea" to find a faster route to China and India. He got three ships, now remembered as Niña, Pinta, and Santa Maria.

The Santa Maria was the largest of the ships (and also the slowest). It was Columbus's flagship on the first voyage. It was constructed in Pontevedra, Galicia. Because of this the Santa Maria was sometimes referred to as "La Gallega", meaning "the Galician". The ship was classified as a carrack, a three or four mated ocean-going sailing ship. The Santa Maria had four masts. The four and main masts both carried a square sail, while the mizzen (or aft) mast had a triangular sail. She reportedly sailed well across the Atlantic, but she ran aground near Haiti and broke apart. Her hewn timbers were then used to build a fort known as La Navidad, because the wreck occurred on Christmas Day. The ship was not built especially for this journey, but had been built long before and was rented from its master and owner Juan de la Cosa. As Columbus was the Admiral of the Fleet, Juan was the Captain of the Santa Maria. He would also accompany Columbus on his second and third voyages.

"Pinta", meaning "Painted One", is thought to be a nickname for the second vessel. Her given name is no longer certain. The Pinta was a caravel. This was a smaller two or three masted ship of about 20 meters in length (about 65 feet) and about 7 meters wide (22 feet). It could be crewed by about 25 sailors. It was captained on the first trip by Martín Alonso Pinzón. He was also part owner of both the Niña and the Pinta.

ANSWER ALL QUESTIONS

Question 1

Read this passage and answer the questions below in complete sentences. (15 marks)

Ships cost a lot of money to build. A general cargo vessel costs several million pounds and a giant tanker can cost over £40 million pounds. The main reason for this is the high cost of steel and other materials used in ship building. Another reason is the high cost of labour.

A modern shipyard is designed for building ships as cheaply and quickly as possible. Many of the old processes have disappeared or been combined into one fully mechanized process. Machines are now used instead of men. Today, ships can be built in about sixteen months and costs can be kept to a minimum.

Who designs ships? Ships are designed by naval architects. In Europe and Japan, shipyards employ naval architects to design a ship for a customer, or offer basic designs which can be varied to suit the customer's needs. Ship owners may also go to independent firms of shipping consultants and ask their naval architects to design a ship for them.

When ship owners decide to order a new ship, they tell the naval architect the cargo they want the ship to carry. They also tell him what routes the ship will ply and the desired speed. They put limits on the ship's dimensions and on the price that they are prepared to pay. The ship must also comply with the rules of the classification society and international regulations. Economic, engineering and safety factors all govern the design of a ship.

ANSWER ALL QUESTIONS

Question 1

Read the following passage and answer the questions given below in complete sentences. (15 marks)

In an effort to produce the largest, fastest and most luxurious ship afloat, the British built the S.S Titanic. It was superior to anything else on the seas that it was dubbed “unsinkable”. So sure of this were the owners that they provided only twenty lifeboats and rafts, less than one half the number needed for the 2,227 passengers on board.

Many passengers were aboard the night it rammed an iceberg, only two days at sea and more than halfway between England and it’s New York destination. Because the luxury liner was travelling so fast, it was impossible to avoid the ghostly looking iceberg. An unextinguished fire also contributed to the ship’s submersion. Panic increased the number of casualties as people jumped into the icy water or fought to be among the few to board the lifeboats. Four hours after the mishap, another ship called the Carpathia, rescued the 705 survivors.
